Narrow gauge train

By the Lithuanians, this is the favourite railway kindly called 'siaurukas' and has been there for the second century. It began operating in 1899. It was the time of black steamers and wooden wagons. In the first half of the twentieth century the narrow gauge railway was the main means of transport in Aukštaitija, carrying both passengers and cargo. It was used to take flax, bacon, sugar beet, flour, butter, linseed, forest material, sand to Panevėžys from surrounding areas. For farmers it was delivering salt, fertilizer, kerosene, and coal. Since 2001, the narrow-gauge railway is no longer used as a regular transport road and is now considered one of the most unique and protected objects of cultural heritage in the Republic of Lithuania.
